Is an important factor in keeping good health; if it does not act in the way intended by nature, its functions are performed by other organs,—the Kidneys and the Lungs; and the result is a breakdown of general health.

DYSPEPSIA.
Riga, Minn.: I now write to let you know that I have been using your Burdock Blood Bitters, and also to tell you what they have done for me. I have been troubled with dyspepsia for years. I commenced the use of your Burdock Blood Bitters and they have brought me out all right. The use of three bottles conferred the great benefit, for which I feel profoundly grateful. I will never be without it.

THE MIND IN SLEEP.

Mental Activity During the Sleep of Clarendon.

Instances of the Action of the Brain During the Sleep of Clarendon.

What is a dream?

Simply the washing of the mind while the body is asleep.

The mind does not need sleep to rest, in fact, it never takes it.

Mr. William Hamilton declares that the New York Sunday Journal, that the mind is never wholly inactive, and that we are never entirely unconscious of its activity. J. Grey is quoted as saying that during bodily sleep the mind is dormant. Even if we do not remember our dreams, he says, it is no proof that we have not dreamed.

How many dreams leave only the faintest trace on the memory? It is, therefore, permitted to suppose that many dreams leave no trace at all.

Hunt said that we always dream when asleep, and that to cease to dream would be to cease to live. People who talk of dreamless sleep use an expression which really is at variance with facts; the mind works on, work ever.

When any one is engaged on a prolonged enterprise, like a great book, the building of an edifice, the conduct of military campaigns, the negotiation of a valuable contract, he not only frequently dreams of his work, but the mind dreams of it at times when the memory does not recollect distinctly. This is the "unconscious cerebration" which has worn out so many brains and wracked so many careers.

When Sir Walter Scott was writing his greater series of historical novels, he records in his diary that whenever he came to a difficult place, where his characters seemed to be in an insurmountable situation, he waited patiently until the next morning, when on awakening the solution of the whole trouble would come into his mind.

This was because the "unconscious cerebration" which in time was to use up the animal brain, had been going on all night, solving the difficulty while the author's body was allowed to take repose.

Sometimes the body is influenced by its surroundings, or by certain sensations which penetrate through the veil of sleep—so that the mind indulges in pranks, such as a flighted goat Dr. Gregory.

This incident furnishes a text for sermonizing on sectionalism. The North will shout for the blue, and the South will yell for the gray, while they march with each other across the bloody chasm. "It all depends on how far I raised."

"What couple?"

"Why, that rhyme about Johnston and Lee," said the reporter quoted from the letter.

"That does jingle, doesn't it. I hadn't thought of that before—purely accidental."

"I just couldn't help it," he said, "it appears that I was the only southerner in the audience, for I don't believe that any southern man could have suppressed a cheer on that occasion. I must confess that I felt rather peculiar after I had cooled down."

"Where did you get that little escape?"
